

Senior Living

Tips for Right-sizing the Next Phase

FROM PAGE 3

but elegant living space, Hergenrath says, "First, think about the work the space needs to do."

WAITING TOO LONG before making the decision to downsize can complicate the process. "It's always better for someone to downsize to a smaller home before they are in a crisis situation, [for example] suddenly, they can no longer climb a lot of stairs and must move to a single-level dwelling, but often a person will put off that decision until it's nearly too late," said Cele Garrett, Executive Director of At Home in Alexandria. "We have some members facing that decision right now and they'll often admit they should have done it sooner."

For many seniors, a living space needs to keep them safe. "You might need to add grab bars," said Sullivan. "Also watch for trip hazards like throw rugs and clutter. Check for furniture that needs to be moved back to make the house more accessible for moving around. Relocate plates, cups and saucers so that they are in easy reach for seniors."

Sullivan's organization has volunteers who can help with enlarging bathrooms and widening doorways to accommodate wheelchairs and walkers.

When designing a new, smaller space,

Sanders recommends interior design magnetic floor planning kits, which help determine a person's furniture needs and placement before they actually move. "The starting point for every good move is the floor plan at the receiving location," he said.

When moving out of a familiar environment and into new surroundings, there are a few factors that can be overlooked when striving to maintain one's quality of life.

"Personal style is rooted in your past, places that you love, the present, what you love today, and the future."

— Susan Hergenrath, Ph.D., professor of interior design, Marymount University

If a senior chooses to live alone, there are several issues that should be monitored, advises Maura Barillaro, a registered nurse with Home Care Assistance in Bethesda, McLean and Fairfax. "Basically, there are so many needs that we see in the elderly, including boredom, frailty, loneliness, mobility issues, progressing illnesses," she said.

"We would all like to maintain cognitive functioning throughout our lives and this is especially important late in life," said Pam Greenwood, Ph.D., associate professor of psychology, George Mason University in Fairfax, Va. So when looking for a new place to live, make sure there are opportunities for physical exercise, mental stimulation and social stimulation.

"The strongest evidence concerns aerobic exercise – there are real benefits for mind and brain of moving physically daily," said Greenwood.

"There is also growing evidence of the benefits of cognitive training for everyday functioning – perhaps the strongest evidence is perception training – visual and auditory perception. Several studies, including our own, have shown broad transfer of benefits from perception training to everyday functioning."

When remodeling this bathroom, Glickman Design Build added a bench to this shower. Such features can help seniors to downsize and live alone safely.

PHOTOS COURTESY OF GLICKMAN DESIGN BUILD