

A House Expanded

A cramped, dated home is transformed into a spacious, modern abode.

When the owners of a Bethesda home realized that they'd outgrown their one-story, mid-20th century abode, they decided to remodel and expand rather than relocate. A family-friendly neighborhood and high-performing schools were two of the reasons they wanted to stay.

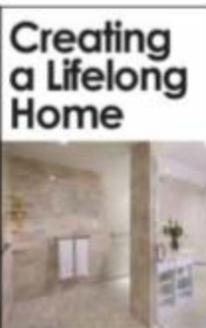

"Their main wish was to have as much storage as possible," said Justin Wigfield, project manager, Clickman Design Build in North Potomac.

The remodeling project included a renovation of the entire basement and first floor as well as a redesign of the home's exterior. The first floor is now an open, free-flowing space that includes a kitchen with a walk-in pantry and breakfast area. The main floor also holds a guest suite, mudroom and screened-in porch.

Adding a second floor gave the family an additional 2,000 square feet of space and includes the master suite, children's bedrooms and a laundry room. The remodeled basement now holds a gym, a game room, a bedroom and ample storage.

The kitchen of this newly remodeled Bethesda home includes a walk-in pantry, breakfast area, Caesarstone counter tops and a Kohler vault apron front sink.

Many of us love the idea of staying in our homes as we age. But what does this really mean? A few simple updates can make a big difference in the comfort and safety of our homes as we get older. And they can often be great for resale purposes as well.

First Floor Master Suite. A first floor master suite provides single floor living with a bedroom, bathroom, living room and kitchen all on one floor.

Elevator Rough-In. If you are planning on adding space to your home now, think about incorporating a rough-in for an elevator. It's much easier to do as you are building than to add later.

Bathroom and Kitchen Features. Incorporating a curbless shower or grab bars in the bathroom or roll out drawers in the kitchen are great features to consider. Not only will they potentially be helpful down the road, but are nice to have of any age.
